CAST OF FOOTPRINT LEFT BY KIDNAPPER MAY BE BIG STATE SURPRISE IN THE TRIAL OF HAUPTMANN; BATCH OF EXHIBITS NOW LINK HIM TO THE CRIME

Whether Footprint Corresponds With That of Man Now in Custody Has Not Been Officially Disclosed — The Most Specific Evidence Against Him is Ransom Money

This is the eighth of a series of 12 articles discussing evidence which will be delved into at the trial next month of Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 18.—(INS)—A ladder, a tiny gun owned by Hauptmann, ransom money, road maps, a chisel, nails, a German-English dictionary and specimens of the defendant's handwriting, will play an important part in the impending trial for murder of Bruno Richard Hauptmann.

The state will use them in an attempt to tie Hauptmann to "the crime of the century."

Perhaps the most specific evidence of all against the defendant is the ransom money. That is hard to refute and the prisoner admits he had it.

When the police raided the Hauptmann home in the Bronx, New York city, at the time of the defendant's arrest they found $13,750 in Lindbergh ransom bills secreted in the suspect's garage.

"You won't find any more money," Hauptmann told the authorities.

But they went back and found $840 more cleverly concealed in holes bored in a plank in the garage. A small automatic pistol was found hidden in one of the holes.

The tiny gun may play a significant part in the trial—and again it may not. It will be important if the state claims that Baby Lindbergh was shot.

At the autopsy it was found that the child had suffered a wound on the head, as if he had been struck by a blunt instrument. Nothing was said in the medical examiner's report, however, of a bullet wound.

Hauptmann said he purchased the gun from a friend but declined to reveal this man's name. Later Hans Mueller, a cousin of Hauptmann's, said in an interview that it was he who sold the gun to the Lindbergh case suspect.

Hauptmann would not agree that the tiny pistol was the type of "Kamerad" gun said to have been in use by the Germans during the war—a small gun that could be concealed in the palm of the hand when a prisoner was ordered to throw up his hands.
Hauptmann was a German machine gunner during the war.

The kidnap ladder will be an important exhibit. Lumber from which the ladder was made is declared to have been traced to the Great National Millwork and Lumber Co. in the Bronx.
Hauptmann not only worked at this place for a time but also made small purchases there.

However, Hauptmann steadfastly insists he had nothing to do with the kidnap ladder. Although he was a carpenter for nine or ten years he claims he never built a ladder. He admitted he could build one—"any carpenter could."

What part the chisel will play at the trial remains to be seen. Investigators have been trying to trace the chisel, which was used to pry open the window of the nursery at the Lindbergh home, to a Bronx hardware store where Hauptmann made purchases.

Experts also have been making tests to determine whether a hammer owned by Hauptmann pounded the nails used in the kidnap ladder.
Nails in the ladder have been stated to match nails found in Hauptmann's garage shop.

Road maps, showing side roads in the vicinity of the Lindbergh home, were found in Hauptmann's trunk.
Also found in his effects was a map showing the region of Martha's Vineyard in the Massachusetts Bay area, to which region the kidnaper directed Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh after the $50,000 ransom was paid.

Hauptmann's trunk yielded a German-English dictionary, with pages containing difficult words turned down.

The penmanship of Hauptmann and the symbols on the ransom notes will also come in for much attention at the trial. It is quite probable that experts will testify that holes in the center of the symbols in each note were made with an awl. Hauptmann was a carpenter.

A New York newspaper pointed out that the symbols are similar to tar-

DOYLESTOWN SCOUTS WIN COUNTY HONORS

Awarded Cup for Proficiency in First-Aid Contest at Quakertown

PERKASIE, NO. 1, SECOND

QUAKERTOWN, Dec. 18.—Captain Fred Billmyer led his Doylestown first-aid team of Boy Scouts to the Bucks county championship on Saturday afternoon at the county-wide contest held in the Quakertown High School gymnasium.

The Doylestown Troop No. 2, sponsored by Salem Reformed Church, of Doylestown, was coached by Scoutmaster George E. Dorner, an expert in first-aid work.

Members of the championship first-aid team include Scouts Billmyer, captain, Robert Dippy, Jr., Arthur Gross, John Sigafoos and Arthur Tyson, with Jack Moore as the patient.

The "champs" scored 1149 out of a possible 1200 points through their ability to properly administer first aid during three problems of three injuries in each one. They made perfect scores of 300 in both the care of the patient, and improvising equipment.
Out of a possible 300 points each, they scored 285 points for accuracy of the treatment, and 264 points for the neatness of the treatment.

There was only an eighty-two point difference between the highest and the lowest score. Perkasio No. 1 (the 1934 county championship Scoutcraft troop) was close on the heels of Doylestown with a score of 1125 points, giving the victors only a small margin of 24 points. Milford took third place, with 1104 points, and fourth was a tie between Langhorne and Bristol No. 7 for a total of 1093 points. Every team was over 1000, and received recognition as a standard first aid team. The other teams placed respectively Quakertown No. 2 (1088 points), Morrisville, No. 1 (1081 points), Chalfont (1071 points), and Trevese (1067 points).

ANNIVERSARY MARKED BY LANGHORNE CHURCH

Oldest Member of Presbyterian Group Present
At the Ceremony

PRESENTS A GIFT

LANGHORNE, Dec. 18.—As part of the program in acceptance of an electric clock presented to the Langhorne Presbyterian Church by its oldest member Mrs. Eva Pryor, on Sunday on the occasion of the church's anniversary, Carl A. F. Corts, Sr., superintendent of the Sunday school, gave a brief history of the church and the other gifts made to it since its founding. Every pupil present Sunday sat awed with astonishment as he related these events, many of them unknown even to the present pastor and elders.

"Just forty-six years ago on March 18, 1888," said Mr. Corts, "thirty-two persons met in the Langhorne Library at 9.30 in the morning and organized the Presbyterian Sunday School—the very one we have today and enjoy so much." The group, it is interesting to note, adopted the International Sabbath School lessons which work the school has followed faithfully to the present day.

"Thirteen days later, on April 1, 1888, the Sunday School met in Odd Fellows Hall, Langhorne. The school was followed by a church service which has been held regularly from that date on. It was not until June 7, 1888, that the duly sworn organization was effected. There were twelve original charter members. The thirteenth member of the church or who could be called the first chosen or received member was Mrs. Eva Pryor who is now living at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rothel on Winchester avenue. All the original charter members have passed on to eternity." Hence Mr. Corts' apt title for Mrs. Pryor, "The mother of our church."

The first pastor was the Rev. Gould who commuted from Philadelphia and held the first sacrament of the Lord's Supper, September 16, 1888.

On October 8, 1892, ground was broken for the new church building and on March 25, 1894, Easter Sabbath morning, the first church bell ever rung in Langhorne sent forth its musical invitation of prayer and praise from the tower of this church.

The bell was the gift of Mrs. C. C.
Riggs and her sister, Mrs. Mary Connor, as a memorial to their mother and father. The bell weighs 750 pounds.
It is inscribed with the following: "In memory of John Henry Connor and his wife 1894" — "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

The end of March, 1894, saw the church completed except the furnishings. It is noted too, that the Missionary society was organized on March 30, 1894.

Little was done in material improvements until 1903, nine years later, when the trustees were instructed to build the Sunday School rooms which were promptly completed.

For the pastor and elders, the general gown was first used on June 2, 1907. This practice has since been discontinued.

The original bell tower was dismantled in 1907 and work started on the present impressive tower and front doors, April 22, 1908. The church life was carried on in various homes and out of doors all the summer of 1908 and not until February 14, 1909, did the congregation again meet in the church building, all the repairs having been completed. The custom of individual communion was instigated April 3, 1909, and has been used ever since. 1909 also saw the presentation of the magnificent pipe organ now used in the church. This was the gift of Mrs. Charles J. Matthews in memory

'SAINTS' AND BRISTOL A. A. WIN OPENING GAMES

Basketball Season Opens Here With Two Games On Mutual Aid Court

INTERESTING CONTESTS

"Spade" Spadacino's St. Ann's A. A. quintet made a very auspicious debut in its 1934 start, swamping the Croydon Gaels, 44-17, in a one-sided affair on the Italian Mutual Aid floor. The "Saints" were entirely too much for the Gaels and outplayed them from start to finish.

Every player on the St. Ann's team scored four or more points during the 40 minutes of milling. "Petie" Bor-nice and "Eddie" Roe led the way with thirteen and nine points, respectively.
The Purple and Gold scored from all angles of the court and with its passing curriculum functioning almost to perfection worked the ball to favorable positions on the floor where passes were converted into field goals.
The Croydon team tried various defensive attacks but lacked the ability to stop the winners.

Opening its attack in the first period, the Purple and Gold quintet began to score easily. With Bornice and Ray Dorsey scoring nine points between them and Roe a point, St. Ann's held a 19-2 lead at the whistle. "Jimmy" Lake scored the two points for the Croydon team.

BITTER FIGHT LOOMS

Flemington, N. J., Dec. 18.—In spite of the passage by the New Jersey Legislature at Trenton, last night, of the so-called Wolber bill, a bitter fight for the right of New Jersey to summon witnesses from New York to testify against Bruno Richard Hauptmann at the trial next Monday, loomed today.
The measure which empowers New Jersey to subpoena witnesses from New York, passed both houses of the Legislature and was placed before Governor A. Harry Moore for signature, just as counsel for the Bronx carpenter accused of the murder of the infant son of Colonel Charles A. Lindergh reached a climax in their battle on another front.

THREE KILLED IN TRUCK CRASH

Malvern, Dec. 18.—Three men were killed today when their coal truck carrying fuel from Shamokin to Philadelphia, left the road, crashed into a concrete and iron telegraph pole and burst into flames on the Lincoln Highway at Doylestown, one mile east of here. The dead were: John J. Dormer, 25, and his brother, Thomas, 35, both of Shamokin, and Evan B. Smith, of Philadelphia. The crash occurred shortly before dawn. Following an investigation by state troopers, Deputy Coroner H. G. Cox, Malvern, said it was evident the driver, John Dormer, had fallen asleep at the wheel. As the truck crashed into the pole the vehicle overturned and burst into flames, blinding the three victims in the cab.
Unable to render assistance because of the intense heat, A. Nolen, on whose property the accident occurred, telephoned for aid from the state police barracks at Paolet. The men, all of whom had apparently been knocked unconscious by the force of the impact, were burned to death before firemen from Paolet and Malvern could extinguish the fire. The victims were identified by Frank Dormer, a brother of two of the men, who conducts a coal business in Philadelphia.

CLOSE CROYDON SCHOOL; 128 HAVE INFLUENZA

Decision Reached to Cease Classes When 35% of Students Are Absented

TWO TEACHERS OUT

CROYDON, Dec. 18.—With 128 pupils absent from classes due to attacks of influenza, school authorities closed the Croydon public school yesterday at three p. m. Classes will not be resumed until after the holidays, or on January 2nd, it is announced.

The 128 pupil absent constitute 35 per cent of the roster here. In addition two teachers from this area are also ill with the same malady, Miss Ethel Kines, Croydon school, and Miss Thelma Clugston, Badger school.

On Thursday of last week there were found to be over 70 students missing from classes, due to illness.
By Friday the number had risen to 85, and a much larger jump took place by yesterday, with 128 out because of influenza.

Preparations are being made for the third annual turkey card party to be given in the St. Ann's school auditorium, Thursday, for the benefit of St. Ann's Church.

The committee in charge of the affair has secured many valuable prizes as well as the 15 turkeys which will be awarded to the first 15 lucky winners. Among the other prizes are: smoking stands, lamps, baskets of fruit, and linen.

Anna Alite, chairlady of the committee, reports that many tickets have been sold and indications point to the largest crowd of the year, even surpassing the party of last year.

Pinochle, bridge, and "500" will be played, with the playing starting at 8.30 o'clock.

SEARCH FOR BODY

Every effort is being made by the authorities to locate the body of Wilsom. Belief is that the murder was committed in a bungalow at Torresdale Manor. Yesterday the garage floor at the bungalow was ripped out, but no trace of the body was found.

VETERAN PRISONER'S PLEA FOR A CHANCE REFUSED BY JUDGE

Judge Boyer Tells Prisoner He Should Have Told Story
To First Judge

ADMITS LONG RECORD

Was Wanted Here for Alleged Passing of Worthless
Check

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 18.—Continually in trouble for the past 19 years, during which time he served in prisons and penitentiaries, and escaped from others, Edward Hill, a native of Louisiana, told Judge Calvin S. Boyer in court yesterday that he had never yet been before a Judge who had given him a chance.

Hill is also wanted by the Bristol police for passing a "worthless" check on Margaret S. Neher, 817 Radcliffe street, for $26. He is also wanted in Penns. Grove, N. J., for passing a check for $27.50 on Mrs. Josephine Sparks.

"You don't have one-half of my record before you," Hill, who pleaded guilty to passing a worthless check for $36.50 on Sue Adler, of Doylestown, told Judge Boyer.

District Attorney Arthur M. East-burn had just finished reading off Hill's long record of jail sentences and escapes when Hill informed the court that he did not care to take the witness stand, but did want to ask the court for "just one chance."

"I've been in trouble ever since I left home in 1915, in one jail, out a few days and in again," Hill told the court. "I just cannot keep out of trouble. Penitentiaries do me no good whatsoever, but I would like to have just one chance to make good from a Judge."

"You should have told that to the first Judge before whom you were taken," Judge Boyer advised Hill.
"Courts do not give men with records like you any chances."

The court record showed that Hill escaped from the Salem County Jail in New Jersey, and was later sentenced in Trenton for that escape, and that he served in state, county and federal prisons throughout the country for forgery and passing worthless checks.

Judge Boyer sentenced Hill to pay the costs of prosecution and serve from one to two years in the Bucks County Prison.

RAINBOW CLUB HAS DINNER

The Ladies' Rainbow Club held its

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ferguson, Mr.

Mrs. Robert Smith, and Mrs. Anna

Keen interest was shown by those attending the meeting in the high of forming a high school band were

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE"

(By "The Stroller")

Two Bristol merchants, both consistent advertisers, are enjoying fine holiday business.

I had two purchases to make today, and my steps naturally led to shops whose advertisements I had seen appearing in The Bristol Courier. After making my first purchase at Norman's Stationery Store, I inquired of the genial proprietor, "How is business?" knowing well what the answer would be, for I had seen customers in his establishment nearly every time I stopped there.
"Fine," came the quick answer.
"Some around here are complaining about business, but I have no kick. Business is better for me this year than last year." I pondered the answer after I left the shop, wondering at the difference between this shop and those nearby. Then my thoughts reverted to the "ads" I had seen appearing nearly every day.

So I decided to ask the same question at the place where I stopped to do my second errand, Nichols Studio. The proprietor there is also a consistent advertiser, and I wanted to know his reaction. "Business has been great, and the season isn't over yet," he replied, not hesitating an instant.

Naturally I knew that it pays to advertise, and these two merchants cannot help but realize that the fact that their names and variety of merchandise are constantly kept before the public is what makes the difference between their businesses and those of other merchants about them.

NEW YORK'S TAX PROBLEM

New York's two per cent. sales tax has gone into effect. Controller Joseph D. McGoldrick has announced that the city will fight any attempt to evade it by citizens who make purchases outside New York's boundaries and bring them in for consumption. Taxes on such goods are to be paid directly to the controller.

It will be interesting to see what the courts will do if Mr. McGoldrick endeavors to enforce this edict. Imagine a test case. A citizen of New York City drives to Yonkers, finds his gas tank empty and has it filled. He arrives home with 10 gallons of gasoline on which he has not paid the city tax. Will they stop him at the limits, measure the amount in his tank, and collect a tax on it? Or must he drive to the controller's office and pay a nickel over the counter? Suppose he claims he had two gallons in the tank when he arrived at Yonkers; will the collector take his word for it?

Although ready to expect almost anything in taxation, taxpayers are nevertheless bound to be interested in how New York is going to collect both from the man from Yonkers who makes a purchase on Broadway, and the New Yorker who spends a dollar in Yonkers and brings his purchase home.

BUNCOMBE

Again we note the reappearance of the story that Dr. Byron Cummings of the University of Arizona has found in Sonora, Mex., the bodies of 37 men and women, each more than seven feet tall.

The story has been coming in regularly for years. The height of the giants is always given as just over seven feet. They are always found in Sonora, and the invariable source of the story is Dr. Cummings.

Unfortunately, several times Dr. Cummings has distressed lovers of this story by denying he had found any giants. It is to be hoped that he will not be led thus astray in the future, but will conform to the rules of play which provide that such stories are never to be denied or explained, since to do so would wreck the income of a hard-pressed correspondent in one of earth's forgotten corners.

MILK IS A NECESSITY

Here is word from Washington that parents should consider. Dr. Fred C. Howe, of the Consumers Council, says that a study of the food budgets of 29,485 families in 59 cities revealed that 14 per cent. bought no whole milk. Few used the amount of milk now considered necessary for health.

The deficiencies of diet which are imposed on a child can not be restored later in life. Weaknesses attributable to the lack of vital elements may not become evident for years, but they certainly will appear.

Two reasons account for this parental neglect: Ignorance, and the cost of milk. A campaign of education would correct ignorance. A lower price would reduce the milk surplus.

A critic of passive resistance says India feels sorry for itself but does nothing. We had supposed that that crying towel of Gandhi's was a sheet.

His Tax Plan Wins

Governor George White

In the closing days of his administration, Governor George White, two-term governor of Ohio and defeated candidate for the U. S. senate, realized a surprising "lame duck" legislative victory by securing the passage of a sales tax program which is expected to bring a revenue of approximately $56,500,000. Passage of the bill, which had been turned down previously by the Ohio legislature, signified success in White's two-year fight in behalf of the measure.

"BEACH BEAUTY" by ARTHUR SHUMWAY

CHAPTER XXX

As Kay passed the docks she looked guardedly toward the yacht. One of the sailors, on the deck, waved to her. She waved back. Then she saw the car, the big, familiar Pierce, parked beside the dock. That meant that Ida Campbell was aboard or was out somewhere with Harrow.

Kay was surprised to find that there was in her even the slightest trace of resentment, or envy—for it couldn't, she told herself, be such a thing as jealousy. She was surprised, but she was frank and she admitted that, whatever it was, it was there.

Well, Ida Campbell belonged there. She belonged in Harrow's life! She was his sort of woman, smart, sleek, modern, very sure of herself, and she had a bit of a past, a background of wealthy marriage, fast, sophisticated company, and world travel.

Somehow, thinking about Ida Campbell's natural place in Harrow's life, Kay could not help wondering how she had figured in it at all. She wasn't really the sort Harrow had said so, but that had been mere talk. The yacht, which was now just behind her and only a few hundred feet away, was, in a more subtle sense, miles from her. She found it hard to imagine now that she had danced on it, fished on it, worked, played and lived on it. It was even more remote than the grammar school she had attended and not long ago had happened to visit, smiling at the tiny desks, the stuffy little rooms and the blackboards set low for the short reach of childish arms.

By the time Kay had returned home, she began to see that her problem was doing what she had hoped it would do: it was beginning to solve itself. There was no job to be had at the time in Daytona Beach, there was this vast breach between her world and Harrow's, and there was the devotion and insistence of Pete close at hand, his contagious recklessness, ardor and enthusiasm. She felt at this second of consideration that aboard the train to New Orleans she would not be sorry. It was as clear as if she were sitting there now, watching the lights of Florida towns drop behind, and chatting with Pete of their plans for the future. Of course, she could not deceive herself into believing that she was madly in love with Pete, but wasn't this enough? How often, she wondered, did people actually marry feeling a really great love? Was there such a thing, outside a novel?

She wondered when Pete would call, and tried to form in her mind the sentences she would speak to him, calmly, the delicate questions she would ask, with the passionate hope that neither of them would regret any promise or decision they made. It was dinner-time, then eight o'clock, and still Pete had not appeared. Kay began to worry and wonder if she shouldn't go look for him at his house.

She went upstairs to change and was just snapping on the light in her bedroom when she heard a sharp, quick sound that checked her hand on its way to the button. It was a shot. And nearby. No mistake.

Kay turned and ran downstairs. The cook stood in the doorway between the dining room and the kitchen, staring at her in fright.

"Did you hear that?" Kay demanded.

"Yes, ma'am."

"Where did it come from?"

"It sounded like out in front," the cook managed to stammer.

Kay went to the desk in the library and took out the old rusty revolver Bud had kept there. It looked ancient and ugly, but the gray leaden noses of bullets looked out menacingly from the chambers in the cylinder. Kay took the gun in her hand, got a flashlight and went carefully to the front hall which was dark.

She peered out into the yard and saw nothing moving. For several minutes she stood and watched, listening. Then she opened the door quietly and stole out. Without using the flashlight, she tiptoed over the lawn, looking behind shrubs, stopping every few steps to listen.

She circled the house carefully, but found nothing, then, growing bolder and getting a better hold on her nerves, she walked quietly down the drive toward the front entrance. She went as far as the sidewalk without seeing anything to arouse her suspicion, and started back toward the house, wondering if her nerves had gotten into such a condition that she had mistaken the backfiring of an automobile for a pistol shot.

Unworried now, she snapped on the flashlight, and ran its beam casually over the front yard. And then she gasped. Something dark and solid lay on the lawn near a clump of hedges that bordered the winding automobile drive. Taking a firm grip on the gun and snapping off the flashlight, Kay ran softly forward until she came to the object.

She had not been wrong; it was a body, a man's body. She flashed the light down on it and saw the first of the bright beam struck, she caught her breath and felt her knees grow weak as if they had suddenly turned to soft putty. The man was Pete.

"Pete, Pete!"

She cried out his name and dropped on her knees beside him. She reached out and touched his shoulder, shook it gently.

"Pete," she said in the voice one uses for waking a sleeper.

But there was no sound from the body; there was no movement about it; the shoulder was as lifeless as a dummy's.

Frantically, she threw Pete over on his back and flashed the light upon him again. What she saw made her gasp. The face was covered with blood which seemed to have streamed upon it from the right side of his head.

Kay thrust her hand inside his shirt and tried to find the suggestion of a heart beat, but in her trepidous excitement could not tell whether Pete was alive or dead.

She drew out her hand and stared at him, the horror and the cold fear growing rapidly within her chest, shutting off her breath, drying her throat and mouth and weighing down like lead upon her stomach.

Even at that moment Harrow's name and Harrow's face flashed into her consciousness and she gripped the revolver that she found was still in her right hand. She knew that if she saw Harrow before her she might begin to squeeze the trigger and not stop until the hammer clicked impatiently upon exploded cartridges.

Then reason returned to her and she realized that she still had not determined whether there was any life left in Pete's fallen body. By one of those strange quirks of memory that psychologists like to discuss, a plan came to her. Several years before she had seen at the theater on the peninsula a motion picture version of "White Shadows in the South Seas." In the film, a young native boy was injured and appeared to be dead. The white doctor—how instantaneously, how ridiculously easily and vividly it all came back to her!—held a shiny belt buckle to the boy's lips and looked at it, then worked furiously to save his life. The Polynesian thought of the buckle as a charm which had brought back the lad's life, but to the doctor it had been a simple device to see if there was still a life to save; it had caught the faint mist from the youngster's feeble lungs and had showed that breath was still in the body.

Kay held the flashlight close to Pete's lips, then looked at the disc of glass, afraid of what she might see. With relief as great as any she had ever known, she realized that the glass was fogged by a thin film of moisture.

"Pete!" she cried eagerly, shaking his shoulder. "Pete!"

But he remained limp and silent as a corpse.

Kay seized Pete's shoulders and dragged him toward the house. It was surprising to her how heavy a limp body could be. When finally she had him lying on the davenport in the living room, a towel under his head, she ran to the telephone. Her hand was trembling so that she dropped the receiver twice and it swung on the end of its cord, banging against the table. The cook stood in the doorway, huge-eyed, speechless, her sweaty hands clamped tight together.

Kay called two doctors before she could find one in. And within a space of time that seemed hours, stopping every few minutes, she was standing anxiously above the bent shoulders of the young doctor, watching every movement. The doctor's presence calmed her immediately. He was a very competent young man, small, wiry, light-haired, with a deft, sure way of going about his business, a manner that was at once easy and frank, yet entirely sincere, untouched by the brisk coarseness of some medical men.

Finally the doctor turned to her, smiling boyishly.

"He's going to be all right, Kay," he said.

"Are you sure?" she demanded, hoping desperately that he was not merely trying to reassure her.

"As sure as anybody could be under the circumstances," the doctor said. "Yes, he just got a nasty bump on the head and had a couple of inches of scalp pretty well gouged out. There's a slight concussion and he'll have to keep off his legs and take it pretty easy for a while, but the wound itself doesn't amount to much."

"Oh, thank you!"

The doctor chuckled. "Don't thank me; thank the bird that did the shooting. If I couldn't do better than that I'd quit."

The doctor took out a cigaret, and lit it. "Sit down a minute," he said gently. "We'll have him moved to the hospital. Meanwhile there are a couple of things to get out of the way."

"Oh," she said. She understood what he meant.

"How did young Ryan here happen to get shot, Kay?"

"I don't know. I was just going upstairs to change clothes to go over and see him when I heard the shot. I hurried downstairs and the cook had heard it, too. At first, I thought, in a way, it might be an automobile backfiring, but there have been some prowlers around here lately and I couldn't imagine what it might be. Kay was wondering how much she ought to tell before she confronted Harrow."

"Prowlers?" One of the doctor's sandy eyebrows rose.

"Yes," she said quickly. "You see, mother and Bud are up in the mountains and I've been here alone. I was worried, of course, so I got Bud's old revolver and a flashlight and went out and looked—and that's how I happened to find Pete. There didn't seem to be a soul around."

"Must have given you a nasty scare?"

"It wasn't fun," she said simply.

The doctor patted her shoulder. "Great girl," he said.

Kay knew that this would be only the beginning of explanations. The town knew that Pete had gone to Guatemala, that he had been vaguely, at least, connected with her. Now, what would people say, what would the police say, when they learned that Pete had been living quietly back in Daytona, and had turned up, shot in the head, on her front lawn?

As she saw it, there was only one thing to do: to confront Harrow and demand an explanation if he would give one, to tell him that she considered she had no further loyalty to him, and then to tell the chief of police the entire story, beginning with the mysterious incident in the old fort at St. Augustine when Harrow had seen someone following them.

She rode over with the doctor and Pete in the ambulance and took care of registering Pete in the hospital. When finally assured that he would be well taken care of, she said, "Doctor, I wonder if you'd come with me to see the police? Somehow, I hate the idea of going alone."

The doctor said, "Of course, Kay."

He drove her in his little coupe to the police station. The chief listened politely to Kay's story, nodding at each point and asking no questions until she was through. She said nothing, however, of the mystery concerning Earl Harrow; merely that there had been prowlers near her house and that possibly Pete had come to call on her and had been mistaken for an officer or watchman. This ordeal was soon over, but when she left the station Kay was not sure that her story had found belief. The chief merely had said:

"Very well, Miss Owen. I'll see that your house is watched. And I may want to see you again soon."

"All right," she said, "thank you."

What she was thanking him for she didn't know. As she left the station and looked back at its barred windows she could imagine herself held there because of her part in whatever machinations involved Harrow, or for withholding that part of her story.

CABINET RESIGNS

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Dec. 18.—The cabinet headed by Mikola T. Uzonovitch stepped out of office today following the resignation of Foreign Minister Yevitch. The cabinet was formed October 23rd following the assassination of King Alexander. Members of the Regency Council attempted to form a cabinet of national units, taking in former opposition elements, including Croats and Slovenes. M. Zikovic was slated for the Premiership. Foreign Minister Yevitch stepped out of office today following criticism of his handling of the Yugoslavian dispute with Hungary at Geneva.

The following Sunday, March 26, 1918, the present pastor, the Rev. Henry Cunningham, was installed. For over 16 years Rev. Cunningham has helped the church grow.

Twenty-one years ago, 25 years after the church was founded (April 2, 1913), Mrs. Eva Pryor suggested celebrating the 25th anniversary of the founding of the church. This celebration was a gala event and covered a period of three days, June 6, 7, 8. The Sunday School remembered Mrs. Pryor. And now after 21 years have rolled by again Mrs. Pryor records an anniversary.

After a most interesting talk by the superintendent, Mr. Cortis, the 128 pupils present of the 199 on roll, stood up and gave Mrs. Pryor a heartfelt vote of thanks for her fine work. Mrs. Pryor in recognition of their affection stood up, amid the class of grown boys and young men that she has so faithfully taught all these years, and wished them all the joys the 50 years of Sunday School service has brought her.

The Gaels put up its best struggle in the second canto, counting seven points on field goals by Massilla, Dugan, and Morgan, and a foul by Massilla. But the "Saints" had also found their eyes and Roe's six points plus his co-mates five gave the Wood Streeters a 22-9 lead at half-time.

Two field goals in quick succession by "Frankie" Frankovic gave the Bristol A. A. basketball team a 31-25 victory over the Endeavor Cardinals, of Burlington, last night in the opening game of the 1935 season on the Italian Mutual Aid floor.

Frankovic's field goals came after the Jerseyites had presented a stubborn battle throughout the entire match. Several times they took the lead away from the Bristolians and were in the midst of another spurt when the speedy Bristol guard took two passes from "Toby" Lawrence and sank them both into the net for the winning double-deckers.

"Joie" Roe and Frankovic led the scoring attack on the Burlington boys, registering ten and eleven points, respectively. Roe did not receive his bearings until the second half of the game when he hit the cords for a quartet of double-deckers. "Johnny" Cole and "Toby" Lawrence did good work on the defense.

The Burlington threat was "Nick" Pinto. The lanky Endeavor pivot man made five field goals and a foul and several seemed like impossible shots. He scored the twin-polester which put the Jerseyites one point away from the resident team in the final session.
